Women's league urges reforms

Since the late nineteen-sixties when the women's liberation movement first assumed organizational form, Montreal has seen various women's groups of different types form, split and then disappear.

The Ligue des femmes du Québec however, has a fifteen year history of political struggle against the oppression of women.

This past weekend, the Ligue held its annual congress, "Une femme nouvelle dans un Québec nouveau", marking the celebration of International Women's Day which takes place tomorrow.

The congress, attended by 100 housewives, working women, students, and welfare mothers took a clear stand in opposition to what they consider to be the primary obstacle to the liberation of women: capitalism.

Reports were presented to the plenary meeting dealing with the three main aspects of women's oppression in capitalist society:

the social, political and economic.

The assembled women passed a resolution to "support and promote the organization of a mass party of the working class", the best way to assure the equal participation of women in the political life of Québec. In doing so, the Ligue rejected the notion behind such organizations as the Women's Political Caucus in the US which seeks simply to elect female Democrats and Republicans and secure equal class privileges for middle class women with middle class men.

The political resolution also called for the liberation of the three imprisoned union leaders (Laberge, Charbonneau and Pénin). The women also acclaimed the signing of the peace treaty in Vietnam and pledged continuing support for popular and democratic movements around the world; they urged the Canadian government to make financial restitution for its share of responsibility in that "immoral and cruel war". The resolution on Vietnam also called for compensation to be paid to the victims of the war in Vietnam by Canadian companies who sold war materials to the US, and for Canada to recognize the Provisional Revolutionary Government.

In addition, the political resolution called for the right to self-determination for both the English - and French-Canadian nations, supported the demands of the native people of Canada, demanded the elimination of wea-

Irish socialists speak at McGill

"Plain-clothed British troops are conducting a terrorist campaign in Northern Ireland, assassinating people on both sides to keep the working class divided and weak." In fact, the self-control maintained by the people in the face of continual provocations by troops in uniform is amazing and it's a miracle that there has not been a greater loss of property and life." These comments were made by three members of the Fintan Lalor Republican Club, a newly formed, Montreal-based affiliate of the Official wing of the I.R.A., during a panel discussion held in Molson Hall, Monday night.

Tom McAteer, Hugh MacCormack and Dave O'Reilly also described how British troops are being trained in Canada and the US in anticipation of massive urban unrest in Northern Ireland. Mock-ups of Irish streets have been built in Nova Scotia, Alberta and North Carolina for this purpose.

The eloquent panelists were highly critical of the way the Northern Ireland situation is being treated in the North American press, claiming that newspapers here merely repeat slanted British news reports. "The British propaganda machine has continually attempted to cloud the real issues, twisting a question of basic democracy to one of religious feuds and unity," Mr O'Reilly said. MacCormack described how newsmen who are unsympathetic to the British point of view, such as the Swedes and Italians, are repeatedly denied the right to cover events in Northern Ireland.

Emphasising the importance of the past to understanding the present situation, Mr McAteer gave a brief history of British involvement in Ireland. The relationship between Ireland and England has always been one of colonizer-colonized, he said, with the British continually attempting to break down the identity of the Gaelic people. "However," he said, "on account of the close geographical proximity of Ireland to Britain, this process of colonization has continually been arrested."

AUS week "strikes"

Architecture Week, when the phantoms of the North McConnell wing try to gain some campus recognition, is booming into the mid-week stretch. Tuesday's feverish activity saw the triumph of Mike Furlong's half-key (he had to split it with his campaign manager) election campaign. Tuesday night, a near-capacity audience heard speaker Fred Rounthwaite give an interesting talk. Today's agenda includes a seminar with U de M at 2 pm; Thursday's a Molson brewery tour at 3 pm and a broomball fiasco on lower campus at 8 pm; and Friday's the Architecture Ball. A "speed slide rule competition" is reportedly scheduled for Saturday, for anyone who wants to show.

The famed ice palace competition, with a first prize of $30, was won by the team of Maples and Heckrotte. The prize was awarded on the basis of models, as the weather did not favour actual construction in the snow. A spokesman for the winning team described the entry as "sort of a rhomboidal prism incorporating a free form multipath slide".

ponents of mass destruction and urged democratic solution to the language question.

In the social resolution, the Ligue called for legislation to guarantee industrial - and community-centered 24-hour child care, paid for by the government; the elimination of discrimination against women in education and employment; the dissemination of birth control methods and information; free maternity care; abortion on demand and adequate facilities to meet this demand; low-cost housing; effective rent control; a guaranteed annual income for one-parent families; the lowering of food prices by government controls to eliminate profiteering at processing and merchandising levels, and the nationalization of Bell Canada.

The economic resolution adopted by the plenary session called for equal pay for equal work, and for the end to economic discrimination against married women by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The trade unions were called upon to intensify their efforts to unionize women workers.

"We consider that the unity and solidarity of the working people and all democratic people require that men and women recognize that they share common economic interests in their struggles against exploitation, and that they should cooperate at all levels, in the factory, the trade unions, the home and in the community."

For all those who missed the congress of the Ligue des femmes du Québec, there will be a teach-in on "La femme - travailleuse, ménagère" organized by a women's group at the Université du Québec, a women's local initiative project and a group of union women. This con-

McAtter related how the people have struggled against Britain's economic exploitation for over three hundred years, a struggle which has resulted in the partition of Ireland, the emergence of the Irish Republican Army to protest the people from Britain's oppressive and aggressive troops, and has brought considerable embarrassment to the British government. "In fact," he said, "one of the first truly fascist states was the Northern Ireland state, with 42% of the people being repressed by laws that make the War Measures Act look like a garden party."

They described the two possible forms of government that may evolve in the North. First, a sectarian or fascist regime could develop, similar to UDI, which would be uncomfortably close to Britain. Secondly, as the North is the most "sophisticated" part of Ireland, a far left type of state could emerge. "Can you imagine a little red star in the centre of the E.E.C, so close to Britain, which is frequently visited by Russian ships?" one speaker speculated.

"Ireland, like Canada, is dominated economically by a close neighbour, and is engaged in the international struggle against capitalist monopoly," Mr. MacCormack said. He also stated that the situation in Ireland is taking a more political colour and that a complete change in the governments of both the North and the South is absolutely necessary. "This is no longer a question of civil rights," he maintained.

All three members were highly critical of the Eire government, calling it "Britain's brainchild" and pointing out that in the past three and a half-years not a single initiative has come from the "docile" South to seek to ease conditions - except platitudes. The South doesn't want to hurt its relationship with Britain, its primary trading customer, and continues to allow itself to be exploited by Britain. "Neither IRA wing recognises the Southern government," one panelist said. "A settlement will only come when both governments in the North and South are abolished, British troops leave the North and an independent socialist republic is formed. Unification is out of the question," he concluded.

Two illustrious speakers have been featured in the Architecture Week program. On Monday night, Oscar Newman spoke on his book Defensible Space. He discussed what makes people feel responsible for certain areas of their houses or apartments, making reference to low-income sections of New York. He described how various methods of housing design or renovation, such as the inclusion of courtyards, the installation of fences, or the repainting of rooms, can significantly change the occupant's reaction to his surroundings.

Tuesday's speaker, Royal Architectural Institute of Canada president Fred Rounthwaite, talked on many subjects, the most important of which was conservation and low-energy-consuming buildings and systems. He described the incredible waste of energy (up to 72% in today's structures, and called for thinking in terms of a "closed system", which could be applied not only to buildings but to communities as well. As one example, he suggested that waste heat from large industries could be used by secondary industry, whose waste could in turn be used by residences. Rounthwaite called also for higher building quality and safety standards, and for a new method of housing finance in Canada based on the potential of the Canadian people as a whole - in form of the reissue of Canada Savings Bonds as "Canada Housing Bonds".

Day care resolution to be voted on today

Today at 1 pm in the Union Ballroom there will be an open meeting of the Students' Society. A vote will be taken on day care. There must be three hundred people present at the meeting in order for it to be considered official and binding on Students' Council. Come out and vote to let all students have a say in where their money goes! A vote will be taken on the following resolutions:

Whereas the McGill Administration has conclusively demonstrated its lack of concern for the real needs of workers and students for day care.

Whereas there remains nonetheless a greatly felt need for progressive and creative day care to benefit all children, regardless of what their parents can afford to pay.

And whereas there is no existing service at McGill which fulfills the above functions.

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT:

1) The Students' Society of McGill University shall take the sum of one dollar from the Students' Society fee of each student to be used to establish and maintain a co-operative day care centre;

2) The above-mentioned sum of money be given to the McGill Day Care Co-operative (MDCC)

The McGill Day Care Co-operative shall be a non-profit incorporated body, and shall be controlled by representatives from parents and students regularly participating in MDCC as well as employees of MDCC;

The purpose of MDCC shall be to a) establish a progressive parent-controlled day care centre for McGill workers, and students, and overflow from the surrounding community; b) include an educational program centred around issues such as family life, health problems, the oppression of women, and provincial responsibility for the provision of day care services in Québec;

3) A check-off system be used at registration each year, whereby all students not wishing one dollar of their fees to be used for the above purpose may indicate this and thereby exempt the one dollar from the above allocation;

4) The Students' Society of McGill University undertake to provide space for the McGill Day Care Co-operative.

A Science student on ASUS

Sir,

I have previously had trouble in dealing with ASUS, and currently support the campaign to separate it into a Science Undergraduate Society, and an Arts Undergraduate Society. This is due to the need to generate interest among science undergraduate students in McGill campus life - a function in which ASUS has pitifully failed. Arts students, I do not think, have been fairly represented by ASUS either, and would also benefit by an autonomous, uncorrupted society organized to fulfill their wishes.

One point reiterated to support the continuation of ASUS is the fact that Arts and Science students take subjects not only in their own faculty, but in the other one also. The administration of McGill recognized this fact, but still saw fit to separate them into two distinct faculties. I believe the needs and wishes of arts and science students are diverse enough to warrant separation of the ASUS, and substantial benefits will be attained by all involved.

One of the main reasons for the failure of ASUS to interest and stimulate science students was their lack of advertising specifically in science buildings, "up the hill", and on the extreme lower campus (Otto Maass, Burnside Hall, and F.D.A.). They consistently claim "well-advertised positions" were available come election and policy time, but this advertising was non-existent in science buildings, and election booths were conspicuously absent. There is a difference in attitude and interest of the students "up the hill", from those on the general lower campus, and this cannot be ignored. A Science Undergraduate Society could, I believe, instigate science students into participating actively in organized events. ASUS has not previously provided any social events, and now that some of us are questioning its structure and function, Susan Ackerman has announced that they are planning an ASUS week this year. I wonder if it will come off, and if it does, how much of a success it will be!

ASUS claims it has done its share for the science students with the new installation of vending machines in the Stewart Building, and its operation of the machines in the McIntyre Building. The machines were put in Stewart upon request of the building director when undergraduates were deprived access to the facilities of the fifth floor lounge in that building, and they provide a limited service only. As for the machines in McIntyre, they are continually out of order. No change machines for anything larger than 25 cents are available in those two buildings.

Another claim of ASUS is the amount of money granted to science-oriented societies. I am involved in the two largest science undergraduate societies as an executive member, and together we only received $850.00: $450.00 for the Pre-Med Society - a reduction over last year's budget; and $400.00 for the McGill Biology Students' Union. This is $850.00 for science students out of the $51,500.00 in the total ASUS proposed budget. Are these "more and larger budgets", Ms Ackerman? Compare this to the $5000.00 allocated to the Free Press, or a $1200.00 unspecified ASUS honorarium. Does this justly represent the science student? One of the many discrepancies noticed in the ASUS budget was that $200.00 was set aside for investigating the possibility of publishing a course evaluation handbook, but the McGill Biology Students' Union - who have carried out the biology course evaluation with widely-published results - was never consulted. This means that this was another well-spent few hundred dollars! This audited budget is supposedly easily attainable, but it took us over three weeks to obtain a copy of it.

Not only were the budgets small, but they were extremely late! They were not released until the end of January. By this time, the first term and one-third of the second term were over, and our societies had had very few, if any activities due to the lack of funds. Left with only two-thirds of the second term, we are now expected to plan all our activities and interest people in our society for executive positions for next year. This is unfair, and totally unnecessary. Besides ruining membership to the society, this type of behaviour destroys whatever interest may have been active in the societies. The primary problem was the judicial committee investigation of the ASUS election irregularities. The election was undemocratically run, and science students could not achieve any positions of power to represent the science faculty adequately. People are now suggesting that the structure of ASUS is satisfactory, and it is only the present executive that has failed. I think that I have provided enough evidence to show that not just the executive but the function of ASUS is obsolete.

It now takes five years following high school to obtain a Bachelor's degree. This extra year at McGill will allow for further specialization of the arts and science students into their respective studies. This division in studies will create the need for separate societies to interest upper year students, and two separate undergraduate representations are consequently required.

The budget: losing friends

Notes

The Trudeau government rolls merrily on, apparently in power until another election campaign or until it loses a vote of confidence.

With high unemployment and spiralling costs rampant throughout the country, the government needed an economic respite. So, in an attempt to re-win friends and influence people, Trudeau and his cohorts turned to the finance department, and minister John Turner brought down his second budget of the current fiscal year. The budget seems to have mollified the opposition, for the time being at least.

Turner claims that the budget will involve a five per cent decrease in personal income taxes, and will provide a guaranteed $100 a month to pensioners. He also proposes to reduce corporate taxes from 50 to 40 per cent while also enabling businesses to make accelerated write-offs on depreciating equipment.

Another major feature of the budget was the introduction of indexing for personal taxes. Under the old system the tax on $10,000 might be 15 per cent. As the earner's salary changed, so did his tax rate, but not necessarily in proportion to his new income. If for instance, he received a 100 per cent raise to $20,000, his tax rate might have risen to 25 per cent — which meant an increase in real income of only 66 per cent. As a result of this new indexing, taxes will automatically rise as the cost-of-living does. So the government will, in effect, lose control of a vital part of the tax system.

Although it has appeased the opposition for the present, Turner's budget has many drawbacks. For one thing, it is definitely not expansionary enough. At a time of such vast unemployment, the budget is far too conservative. "A deficit of $925 million is not enough to get the country out of unemployment," said Eric Kierans, a former Liberal cabinet minister, who now teaches economics at McGill. "The government has been influenced by unjustified fears of inflation. The net debt is only 20 per cent of the GNP, which is far too small for the situation that we are in. Even with the impetus provided by the budget, we will still have six per cent unemployment." Kierans voted NDP in the last election.

It is clear that the size of the public debt should be no constraint on government spending and on the reduction of taxes as well. To achieve full employment or close to it, the government will have to be willing to receive less and pay out more.

The government is trying to do a patch job on the economy. Turner has claimed that his budget will produce 300,000 new jobs. But he conveniently obscured the truth. With normal growth of the economy, the expansion of employment will add 250,000 jobs independently of the budget. Therefore, at best, the total effect of the budget will be the creation of 50,000 jobs.

The actual tax-cut will only be two per cent, and not five per cent as Turner stated. In his budget of last May, Turner proposed a three per cent increase in personal taxes. This increase was supposed to be passed this year. But because of the Liberal party's perilous position, he would not have had a hope in hell of passing it. So he just cancelled the increase and then lowered taxes by two per cent. By his logic this is a five per cent decrease.

Commenting on the budget, McGill Economics Department Chairman J. C. Weldon said, "Every statistic directed to unemployment was given except by how much they'll reduce unemployment. They never tell us this key statistic because we probably wouldn't like what we heard." Weldon believes that this is the best of a bad series of budgets, but only because it is neutral. "It might solve one-fifth of the problem at best, but it only saves us from further deterioration. What we need is a real reform, one which would place a new set of high officials in the finance department."

The Trudeau government has never told us what it considers to be an acceptable level of unemployment (or employment either for that matter). "We can't judge the success of the new program if they don't make their plans public," said Sid Ingerman, a McGill economics professor.

Ingerman contrasted Canadian economic policies with those of Sweden. "The Swedes panicked when unemployment in their country reached 2.6 per cent," he said. But they also have climatic problems and seasonal variations. Despite this, 2.6

per cent was considered very high unemployment. Ingerman feels we need a national policy based on the development of manufacturing industries to expand employment and to obtain the maximum from our national resources."

If the government is to survive another vote of confidence, it will have to pass the pension increases soon. It could try to pass them along with the corporate tax reductions, but this would be political suicide. David Lewis, whose party is really running the government, has stipulated almost too clearly that he will never support the Liberals if they attempt to reduce corporate income taxes.

"The question of corporate taxes is a waste," said Weldon. "It is a rich versus poor thing and there is no equity in it. Equity should come through income taxes. With unemployment, the write-offs are inefficient. We're just taking taxes away from one resource and giving them to someone else."

Trudeau's government has been a disaster because of its economic and financial policies. The Finance Department couldn't have done a better job of making the government look sick if it were composed of agents of the PC's.

Weldon mused that with the advent of Turner's new budget "vice has given way to hypocrisy". The government will have to do a more convincing job of showing that it is truly concerned with solving some of Canada's problems if it wants to continue to run the show.

Repression of Iranian students

In the McGill Daily of February 13, 1973, an article appeared about Babak Zahraie, an Iranian student who is fighting deportation from the United States. Zahraie's political ideas have displeased the US government, and should he be deported, he may well face prison in Iran.

The article went as follows: "Located in the heart of the Middle East, with borders on the Persian Gulf, Iran has been one of the largest recipients of American military and police aid in recent years. Richard Helmes, the CIA director and coordinator of all intelligence programmes during the first Nixon administration, was recently appointed US ambassador to Iran."

In addition to what was said in that article, there are some other points to be mentioned in order to shed more light on the appointment of Helmes.

While the US government puts heavy control on exploitation of her own oil reserves, the Shah of Iran, the well-known puppet of US imperialism, takes pride in having a high rate of oil exportation in the world.

"No one can tell us how much or how little oil to extract from our wells," he claims. "The Consortium companies could adopt either one of two options, they can join the long queue of buyers wishing to purchase Iranian oil, or the Consortium member companies can alternately negotiate long term purchase agreements with Iran now."

Besides these long term agreements which the US has ordered its puppet the Shah to accept, Iran must give all its oil income back through purchasing military equipment from US producers ($2,000 million worth of military equipment, the biggest single arms deal ever arranged by the Pentagon, announced only two weeks ago).

The experience of the past 30 years shows that during any important and critical period the president of the US has appointed one of his most experienced and reactionary servants to the American Embassy in Iran. Considering Iran's strategic location and vast oil reserves, this is understandable.

The Causes of the present situation go back to March, 1951, when the Majiles (House of Commons), under the leadership of the National Front, nationalized the oil industry and cut off the hands of British Imperialism from Iran's natural resources. Mossadegh, the leader of the National Front movement, came to power. He set up a new economic policy for the country since under the pressure of the British and US governments, and international monopolies, he was unable to sell oil. (The story of the Japanese oil tanker which was turned back by a British Navy ship at the opening of the Persian Gulf is but one example.) Mossadegh's aim was to develop an economy not solely based on oil.

On August 22, 1953, the US succeeded in arranging a coup-d'etat in favour of the Shah who had left the country. The chosen person for operating the coup was General Zahedi, father of the new Iranian ambassador to the US (simultaneously with Helms). Mossadegh and the members of his cabinet along with the other national leaders were imprisoned.

During his period of ruling, General Zahedi made a contract with the Consortium known as the 50-50 Contract (Sept. 19, 1954). The shareholders of the Consortium were British Petroleum (previously Anglo-Iranian Oil Co.) — 40%, five American companies — 8% each, and two European companies, with the remaining 20%. The agreement was to remain in force 25 years, and be extendable for three periods of five years at the option of the Consortium. The main period came to its end in 1969, and the Western imperialist powers are trying to make another deal as long and as beneficial as possible, in a matter of a few years.

Iranian students are well aware of what is going on in their country. The Shah and his reactionary government, in spite of all their efforts, have never succeeded in making Iranian students indifferent and passive, either by means of costly propaganda or by creating a high degree of political repression and terrorism.

Whenever there has been a need to oppose the decisions made by the servants of US imperialism, students have done their best, both by arranging demonstrations and clarifying the real reasons behind the decisions for the misled people.

Time and time again the students have been shot dead in their demonstrations. Two good examples are: a) the government's action during the extravagant celebrations, two years ago, of the 2,500th anniversary of the founding of the Persian Empire, at the cost of the needy people. Several people, including students were executed and more than 7000 students were jailed, because of opposing the Shah's celebrations. b) The second example goes back to 1954, the year the Consortium deal was under negotiation and three progressive students of Tehran University (the capital city university) were shot dead in the hallway of the main building of the Faculty of Engineering, by a police sergeant.

As a result of this political terrorism and to show support for the national movements the Iranian Students Confederation evolved. Since 1962, the Confederation has grown to the extent that today some 80,000 Iranian students all around the world are supporting its activity. It is at this stage that the Shah attempts more than ever before to destroy the Confederation. Even the "democratic" governments such as the US and West Germany, help their loyal servant to succeed in his task. Last year the activity of the Iranian Students Federation of Germany (one of the largest federations) was announced illegal by the German government in a very critical period when the federation was supporting Palestinian students.

The number of Iranian students in the US is 12,000, and they have been very successful in making the real character of the Shah, as well as that of his master, the US, known to the public.

Zahedi, the new Iranian ambassador to the US has been appointed to this position because of his unique character as the most reactionary ambassador. Because of his activities against their movement during his first period of ambassadorship to the US, Zahedi is very well known to progressive Iranian students.

Addressing a press conference in Switzerland, Zahedi states: "The United States will need to import large quantities of liquid fuel by the end of this decade" (the same time as the Consortium deal ends) "It is natural that we should secure ourselves a privileged position as one of the main suppliers". He went on to say that one of his "major objectives would be to persuade the many thousands of Iranian students to go back home", and consequently to jail.

The student, Babak Zahraie, is only one victim of this policy. There are hundreds of Iranian students confronting such difficulties throughout the world.

Helmes's responsibility is to control the national movement inside Iran by his experience gained during the directorship of the CIA, while Zahedi's responsibility is to control Iranian student movements in the US.

NEW DIRECTOR OF GARDNER HALL NAMED

Principal Bell has announced the appointment of Daniel Ish, an Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Law, as the new Residence Director of Gardner Hall. Ish will replace Brian Carr who will be leaving his post in May, after two years as Director.

Professor Ish joined the Faculty of Law last summer after completing the requirements for his LL.M. degree at Osgoode Hall Law School, York University. A native of the prairies, he received both his BA and LL.B. degrees from the University of Saskatchewan. As a law student he was active in the campus legal aid centre and later became Director of a drug crisis centre and transient drop-in centre in Banff, Alberta.

Although Ish's appointment does not officially begin until June, he will be involving himself immediately in the selection of next year's staff at Gardner Hall and will be generally "in view" around the residences for the remainder of this term.

COMMUNITY

M^cGILL

A 10 year old girl in Little Burgundy needs a big sister who could take her out places. She would benefit much from the stimulation and special attention of such a relationship.

A girl who has recently been discharged from the Allan Memorial needs a tutor in grade 10 math. She lives in Montreal North.

An 18 year old Chinese girl is having difficulties with a conflict arising between her traditional family life and life in a youth-oriented urban society. She needs the encouragement and companionship a buddy can give her.

A male, Chinese buddy has been suggested.

A 16 year old Italian girl would benefit from a relationship with an Italian, female buddy.

An 11 year old girl in Pt. St. Charles with possible learning disabilities needs a tutor for reading. Her teacher and a psychologist will help the tutor out with ideas and approaches if desired.

These children need someone who will take an interest in them. You would interact with them in the capacity of a buddy - i.e. big brother or big sister, or tutor. These are not the only children who could use your support. We know of others with similar situations.

We reimburse all volunteers for their expenses. All we need is your time. We expect a commitment of 3-4 hours per week. If interested call 392-8980 or come to Union 414 between 11 and 2 p.m.

Hoop upsets

As last week's article noted, the play-offs are underway. After one round, two upsets have occurred. The big one had to be Bucks' 40-37 triumph over the strong Law contingent, first-place finishers in the ABA. Duff led Bucks with 13 points; Fraid put on a one-man-show for Team Law netting 25. The other upset was Artichokes' 42-30 defeat at the hands of Superstars. Once again, Weinstein led Superstars with 17 points, while Orris was Artichokes with 21.

Other matches went much as expected. Team Psyche overwhelmed Bullets 46-31. Wright of Psyche scored 16, while Lei of Bullets had 14. Eng I and P. Landovskis (12 points) beat Tabbies and Salvatori (15 points) 42-28. Net Vets, led by Langer's 14 points, topped MBA 48-40. Hobbes walloped Humorrhoids 36-35; Brown, Lichacz, and Dylewski all netted 10 points, the latter (regular season scoring leader) in a losing cause. Carnassials defeated Alesmen 46-32; Auerbach, Collins, and Verge all scored 12 points, the former two in a winning cause. And last but not least, Med IV squeaked by Blues 50-30 with the aid of Marchand's 16 biggies. Faust's 13 were not big enough.

In spite of the play-offs, the really important news regarding intramural basketball this week was not the games, but rather the stunning death of Skeeziks Swish, chairman of the basketball program. Mr. Swish was shot to death five days ago by Mrs. Hermione Hoople, mother of the late Alphonse 'the Hoop' Hoople, former star of the intramural program. It appears that Mrs. Hoople blamed the death of her son on Mr. Swish, claiming that he had not taken proper safety precautions.

Mr. Swish was in the Currie Gym, playing one-on-one with one Richard Nixon, and American partial student presently enrolled in a couple of business administration courses at McGill, when the incident occurred. In response to queries concerning the murder, Mr. Nixon claimed that he had seen nothing and did not want to get involved, a reaction that raised a few eyebrows due to its inconsistency with Mr. Nixon's general policy. Fortunately there were other witnesses present, among them Ugh McNeanderthal, Dimwit Sockwilt, Luigi McTavish, Christopher Kravitz, Mighty Brown, Sally Smek, Melvin Preeb, and Herman Schmutz, all members of the intramural basketball program. It might be noted that Skeeziks' last wish, before retiring to that giant eger court in the sky, was that instead of burial or cremation his hide be made into leather and then formed into a basketball, which his 8-year-old son, Dildo, could play with forever, thus always being near his father. Touching, eh?

Foul Shots: The result of the McGill Daily Plumber's Pot broomball watch was not printed in the game report, and I'm sure that a lot of people are dying to know the final score. Well then, I'll tell ya. It was 46-0 for the Daily. The Pot did manage to score 7 goals but they were all disallowed on the grounds that they were beer-bellied into the net. The Daily's convincing win was just another in a long line of proletarian victories, proving once and for all that the revolution is indeed imminent. Bravo, Comrades!

Poetic pucksters face play-offs

"A scoundrel that head hockey referee."

Who might think this poem is a big tickle.

But his unconcern, slack, and spree.

Has delayed this article."

The gruelling seven game intramural ice hockey season has finally come to a close. With it has come the end of any further competition for nine of the seventeen teams.

Let us not forget those teams notorious enough to separate from the rest of the pack and continue in the quest of a championship. Of those eight teams, four come from the NHL and four from the WHA. For the first time the playoffs bring about a cross-over between the two leagues. The first place team of each league plays the fourth place team of the other and likewise for the second and third place teams. This means that quarter final playoff action will see first place (NHL) Eng I against Architecture, Med I against Science II, Management I against Grad Studies, and Education against Management II.

Reflecting back to the last quarter of season play, of the many surprises the collapse of Med II in the WHA and Dentistry I in the NHL are the most noteworthy. Both teams after strong first halves tell apart and missed the playoffs. Another surprise was Management II's big 6-3 upset over Grad Studies, demoting Grad Studies to second place in the final standings. The defeat shouldn't have much effect on Grad Studies who will exhibit their fine talent in full bloom during the playoffs.

Extra Lacings: The only undefeated team this year was Management II, while the only pointless team was Dentistry II. Too bad they don't get any first draft picks... Now that the QUAA season is over, Redmen coach Herb Madill, star centre of Grad Studies, can concentrate on an intramural championship... Jan Turek of Science II scored three hat tricks this season.

THE INTRAMURAL ICE HOCKEY play-offs starts this week with plenty of action like this, as the big guys get a chance to pick on the little guys.
